Pedes:🔴🔴🔴 GO AHEAD AND BUY ROAD MAPS NOW!!! Study your routes in and out of DC if unfamiliar with the area.

On the day of the MAGA rally after the election, I noticed Google Maps and others that simply wouldn't calculate routes into DC from red states especially. Whether intentional fuckery or not, this may happen again, so prepare for your apps/internet to potentially not work.

9 But then again buying some maps might be more comprehensive and easier to read and see alternate routes.

If staying outside of the city and taking Metro, here are tips:

-Metro Center (labeled MC below) is your stop for Freedom Plaza (where the rallies normally begin). It's also your safest choice for any transfer.

-Do not transfer at China Town or L'Enfant Plaza (so avoid blue, green and yellow line and because you would have to.)

-Orange line from Vienna/Fairfax-GMU station is safe. Avoid Orange line from New Carrollton, which is the opposite way from MC. (refer to map)

-Avoid the Red line coming from Glenmont. Red line coming in from Shady Grove to Bethesda, which is the opposite way from MC, is safe. (Refer to map)

-Avoid stations/areas around Capitol Hill.

Maryland_Pede here - avoid SE DC at all costs. Trust me - you do not want to get lost in or drive thru SE DC.

6 NoVA pede here -- while getting in might be okay, getting out will likely be very difficult. It happens every time there is an event. Even July 4th fireworks. People trickle in throughout the day, but leave all at once en masse. Roads are total parking lots. Metros become totally jammed.

My advice is to take metro in, but be prepared to walk out. That is what I will be doing. However you may wish to think carefully about simply hanging around until crowds thin out. This may be when Antifa tries to attack stragglers or small groups. Stay in large groups and walk out.

I am not familiar with Maryland, but I can offer some advice for northern Virginia. All metros outbound will be jammed all the way out until the last stops on their respective lines. If you are leaving from the general Freedom Plaza area, Arlington Cemetery is your closest VA stop, but everybody will go there. It will also likely close earlier than other stops.

So what are some alternatives?

Rosslyn via Georgetown / Key Bridge -- about one hour walking Leave Freedom Plaza and walk in the direction of George Washington University. Foggy Bottom metro will likely be jammed. Consider walking past it, through Georgetown and across the Key Bridge into Rosslyn. The station there will be jammed also but it is a big station that handles two lines (Orange and Blue). You are also far more likely to find cabs in the Rosslyn area, especially if you keep walking along Wilson Blvd or Clarendon Blvd. There are also several hotels in that area. If you are staying there, just walk back to your hotel.

Pentagon via Arlington Memorial Bridge -- about 1 hour 15 minutes walking Leave Freedom Plaza and walk out past the White House, National Mall, and Lincoln Memorial. Cross Memorial Bridge and walk down Washington Blvd until you reach the Pentagon parking lot. Pentagon Metro is big and there is also a big bus exchange there. However, you cannot park in the Pentagon lot. Cabs will likely be scarce right there.

CAUTION: there is always heavy vehicular traffic on this route. Use extreme caution when crossing streets, especially the GW Parkway. Area drivers are real assholes.

Pentagon City / Crystal City -- about 1.5 hours walking If you have made it to the Pentagon, you may as well walk just a few minutes further to Pentagon City. Or, just a little ways past that until you reach Crystal City. In both of those areas are plenty of hotels, restaurants, places to rest and so on. Also, many people live there and there is always lots of people walking around, so safety should not be a major concern.

Reagan National Airport -- about two hours walking If you are feeling brave and can handle the walk, consider walking out along 395 into Virginia. Follow the GW Parkway to Reagan airport. There are always many cabs in that area. However, there is heavy vehicular traffic in close proximity to the walkways and it is not a very pleasant walk. It is doable -- I have done it a few times myself -- but it is not very nice.

Anyways, once you have hiked out to these stations, you can board the metro train out to wherever it is you are going. Cars will still be packed, but the stations themselves will be less crowded. You also stand a much greater chance of getting cabs or Ubers if you are already in Virginia. Especially if you do not mind w  a bit. Relax and get some dinner or grab a beer. Do not worry about roving packs of Antifa; I have neve. ... of them being a problem in Virginia, even in deep blue Arlington County.

2 Yep I was going to say, print maps and would be good to also have contact information written down somewhere for family and loved ones. I know if I lost my phone or it didn't have power, I'd be fucked with

▲ splink 2 months ago +2 / -0

2 Paper maps need no charging and no one can track you with them. Sometimes old school is best school.

2 Take an overland route avoiding bridges and tolls. Old US highways are pretty good and take you through actual downtown America.

Mapquest app installed from an APK site on a phone that has never had a Google account, location not enabled.

Paper maps even better.

2 IT guy here. There are 'offline' navigation apps that cache data locally on your phone. Not as good as google maps and must be set up in advance. However, could come in handy.

Another option would be opening google maps and plugging in routes to various locations (hotel, capital building, whatever) and taking screenshots so they can be pulled up if needed.
